Our Fallen Heroes

The struggle-cost of the recent Canadian military achievement is brought to us with terrible force by glancing over the long casualty lists published in the columns of our daily papers.

There seems to be something ironical in "paying a tribute" to the noble and heroic fellows who have shed their life blood for the upholding of the principles on which the British Empire is founded. The record of their deeds requires no verbal ornamentation; it is in itself imperishable and will stand out prominently when the history of this great struggle is recorded. How then can any comment on their work increase their glory or enhance the overwhelming impression made upon the people of Canada by their splendid sacrifice?

With the personal grief of these bereaved Canadians who have to mourn a husband, a son, a father, a brother, or a lover, the public has no right to concern itself. The profoundest sympathy at such moments, is that which is most silent. Apart from the irresistible anguish of personal affection, there should be no grief or lamentation over the sudden cutting off of these glorious lives. There is not a single hero of this terrible campaign, who if his life had been prolonged could have done as much for Canada, for civilization and for all that makes life great and noble upon this earth as he did in those brief moments of sacrifice on the blood-stained fields of Belgium.

These men have died as they would have desired to die. Instead of mourning over their death, Canadians should rejoice that these of her sons have been worthy of our forefathers and traditions of the British Empire.

Arbour Day

Arbour Day is not observed in Canada to the extent which its importance warrants.

The people of Canada must ever keep in mind their dependence upon her forests, with large areas suitable only for forestry purposes. It is essential that the value of trees and their protection should be thoroughly impressed upon Canadians.

While Arbour Day is observed in the rural schools, and in some city schools, the recognition by the general public is not so general as it should be.

In the province of Saskatchewan, Arbour Day is celebrated to a limited extent in the schools.

This is not sufficient, however. The observance of Arbour Day should be general. There is need in every part of Canada for the education and instruction which Arbour Day represents. The day should be observed as a public holiday, at a time most suited to the climate conditions of the locality.

Public recognition should be given to Arbour Day, and the planting and protection of shade trees, the preparation of flower and vegetable gardens, and the thorough cleaning up of homes and surroundings should be advocated as special duties for the day. Arbour Day has its justification in the value of trees, from whatever point of view they may be considered.

Nothing contributes so much to make the world a pleasant place to live in as trees.

The true home feeling is not satisfied without the presence of the trees, with their shelter and shade, their beauty of form and feat, their blossom and fruit their varying shades with the passing of the seasons, and their fullness of colour in the autumn days. They also afford homes and shelter for our feathered friends — the birds — during their annual visits to us.

There is nothing which will add beauty and value to a home or the schoolhouse more than the presence of trees: their is likewise nothing which adds more to the comfort of the pedestrian than shade trees on the roadside. This may be long and dusty, but under the cool shade of the trees relief is found.

It is to be hoped, therefore, that the celebration of Arbour Day will become more general that the planting and care of trees and shrubs around school houses, homes, public spaces and by roadsides may have the effect of developing a keener appreciation of the value and beauty of trees; and that in thus enlarging the field of Arbour Day activities, greater interest may be created in the protection of our Canadian forests from the reckless destruction by fire and the axe with which they are threatened.

"The Little Things of Dress" is the title of an article published by a local paper. We know what the little things of dress are. They are those ding-busted damn fasteners.

Sorry censor! we should have said "dome."

The preacher who prefaced his sermons with the phrase, "God be with you," is at least entitled to credit for sympathizing with the congregation.

After the Emden's crew broke loose they went to the Port of Lidd, presumably hoping to cover their escape.

While industriously engaged in sweeping out the store the other day, the sweeper inadvertently collided with a young lady. Under the impression that he had bumped into the store "model" he dropped his broom and grabbed what he supposed was the store model, round the waist, in an endeavour to save it from falling over. Imagine his consternation and embarrassment when he found himself holding a charming young lady customer in his arms.

Such is life in a western prairie town, during Brighten Up Week.

He — At a football dinner a man got up and left the table, because some one told a story he didn't approve of.
She — Oh, how noble of him! What was the story?

Folks in Ruts

The world is full of ruts, my boy,
some shall and some deep;
An' ev'ry rut is full o' folks, as high as they can heap.
Each one that's grovelin' in th'
ditch is growin' at his fate,
An' wishin' he had got his chance
before it was too late.
They lay it all on someone else or say 'twas just their luck—
They never can't consider that 'twas caused by lack o' pluck.
But hence the word of one that's lived clean thro' from soup t' nuts;
Th' Lord don't send no derricks 'round
t' h'ist folks out o' ruts,
But only them that helps themselves,
'an tries for better things,
Will ever see th' helpin' hand t'
which each climber clings.
This 'ere's the 'ard, plain, solemn facts, without no "ifs nor buts,"
Th' Lord don't send no derricks 'round
t' h'ist folks out o' ruts.

Co-operation

Many of our farmers, especially in the more progressive communities in the west, are beginning to realize that their true interests are best served when they support their own country town. They have learned to resist the temptation of mail order catalogues and to give their cash business instead to their own local stores. Not only their own experience, but more especially the experience of brother farmers in the United States, has taught them that the inevitable outcome of sending their cash orders away to mail order houses is the degeneration of their own country town, and the decrease in value of their own farm property.

If farmers are beginning to learn the lesson that they must support their country town in order to advance their own best interests, it is of very great importance that retail merchants should offer to farmers a more efficient service than the best he has hitherto offered. If the country merchant is supported by the farmer's cash business, as well as his credit business, there is no reason why he should not produce a service equal to the best that any mail order house can offer, both as regards the price and quality of his goods.

Gun Club Meeting

The annual meeting of the Oyen Gun Club was held on Tuesday evening, in the Alberta Hotel.

After the financial statement for last season had been read by Mr. T. Lees and accepted as satisfactory, the following officers were elected for the year 1914. Mr. Steffensen, President; Mr. Tom Lees, Secretary-Treasurer.

It was resolved to hold regular shoots on the first and third Thursdays in each month.

Messrs. Alex Corles and Fred Scott were appointed as Range committee and will make immediate preparations for the first shoot on Thursday of this week.

Proposed Rifle Club

Immediately after the meeting of the Gun Club, the advisability of the formation of a branch of the Rifle Association was discussed. As it was found that thirty members were required before any grant or recognition can be expected from the Government, it was decided to adjourn the meeting until Monday evening next. In the meantime Mr. J. A. Jones was asked to communicate with Major Davie of Youngstown with a view to securing his co-operation and presence at the meeting, and if possible to work in conjunction with the local troop of the 21st. Alberta Hussars.

It is hoped that everybody interested will bear next Monday evening in mind, attend the meeting and assist in making this movement a success. In view of the present crisis in the Empire's history now is our opportunity to form ourselves into a strong corps of defence, which may become a credit to the district, and at the same time obtain useful and practical recreation.

Funeral Service

The funeral service of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Parkinson, who died in Oyen on April 29th, was conducted by the Rev. G. A. Steele last Saturday morning at the Oyen Methodist Church.

Previous to the service the ladies of the church had draped the desk and arranged flowers and plants on the platform.

After the service, at which a fairly large number were present, the cortege left for the cemetery. Messrs. Thomas, Cooper, Nelson, Bowen, Adams, and Lawler, neighbours of Mr. Parkinson, acted as pall bearers.

Mr. Harold H. Chase was a visitor in town this morning. Mr. Alf. Gilson was a town visitor yesterday.
